VETERAN ROWER TO COACH YALE

Experiment With English System a Failure—Harriman Suggests Former Tutor.

New York, N. Y., Nov. 11.—James W. Ten Eyck, the veteran rowing coach at Syracuse, will be engaged to coach the Yale crews next spring, according to gossip in sporting circles here. A meeting of the Yale rowing committee will be held in this city within a few days and it is expected a radical change in the Yale navy will be announced, including the engagement of Ten Eyck.

Yale's experiment during the last few seasons with the English system of rowing has been deemed generally a failure, as the Eli crews have been consistently defeated by Harvard. Only two weeks ago Yale's English stroke again proved ineffectual against Princeton on Lake Carnegie. Alumni and undergraduates are said to have been aroused in opposition to further experiments with the English system which has included the adoption of English shells and English oars, as well as English training methods. It comes from unofficial circles that W. A. Harriman of New York, who is the head coach at Yale, has himself come to the conclusion that the English stroke will not do.

The veteran Ten Eyck is one of the young Harriman tutors, and it is said Harriman himself has suggested the selection of the Syracuse professional. If Ten Eyck is engaged, his position will be one by which he will work in conjunction with graduate coaches, although he would probably have full say in the rowing policy.

Captain Ketcham is informed that the Yale men in this city have so much confidence in the team that they are certain that it will defeat Princeton on Saturday, and Harvard on the following Saturday. The message also expresses regret to the Yale leader of having lost many valuable players through injuries.
